Think globally – act locally: This is what we, as rural women, stand for.

Karin Rau, President of LandFrauenverband Württemberg-Baden e. V.

We are taking part in the DEAB Autumn Conference because climate, food and the empowerment of women are issues that are particularly close to our hearts.

As rural women association, we know that what we do locally has an impact on our environment, our food systems and the future of our rural communities.

When it comes to grazing and pasture-based farming, we know that environmental protection, biodiversity and grazing are not mutually exclusive. On the contrary, they complement and support one another. Across the world, many areas can only be used and maintained in their current form as cultural landscapes through grazing.

As rural women, we take responsibility, want to share knowledge and work together to develop solutions that work in everyday life.

It is particularly important to us to make women visible and empower them. After all, women play a vital role in shaping our agriculture, our families, our villages and our society.

We firmly believe that by learning from one another, looking beyond our own horizons and working together, we can make a real difference – both here at home and around the world.

We look forward to gaining new perspectives, exchanging ideas and engaging in discussions with one another. Together, we want to formulate shared demands for policymakers and help ensure good living and working conditions for all of us.

That is why we are delighted to be part of this event.
